

factors, realizing the difficulty of arriving at a settlement. Many of the most prominent citizens are of the opinion that the trouble there will yet be amicably settled and one, to strengthen his assertion, says that the Carnegie Steel Company has shown all recent concessions, and signed the highest paid workmen will not lose over 75 cents on every 100 tons. He also claims that if the company signs the scale the excess profit only amount to from $25,000 to $40,000 per annum, while it will cost the firm fully $1,000,000 to stand a strike. The workmen, on the other hand, claim they are in a better position to know the true situation than any disinterested parties. They unite in stating that there will certainly be a strike, as the firm's movements in the past three weeks point strongly to such a result. One employee said: "The Carnegie Steel Company has shown all along that it prefers to operate its mills with non-union men than to employ organized labor, and it is pretty generally known that it would raise some price at this year's meeting, which would mean the Amalgamated Association would not agree and consequently trouble would ensue. To prove this the firm began preparations for a conflict a long time previous to their conference with the union, and before they knew whether or not their scale would be accepted."

JEALOUSY CAUSES A RIOT AT RANKIN

Inspired with the hope of bettering his financial condition, and nerved for his bloody task by sundry drinks of cheap whisky, a coal miner named Cyprien Verner shot and fatally wounded his elder brother August yesterday at high noon. It was cold, deliberate and premeditated, according to the attending physician the victim's hours are numbered and he will be cold in death before the close of another day. The murderer, after arming himself with one of those ugly and ponderous imported revolvers familiarly known as the "English bulldog," sought out his brother, and after a few angry words, pulled the weapon from the pocket of his coat and began firing. At first his aim was uncertain and the bullet hissed wide of the human mark. It was this poor marksmanship, caused, perhaps, by the eagerness of his passion-racked assailant, that enabled the victim to prolong his life for a few moments by flight. But this brief delay only maddened the would-be murderer. When his brother fled he followed. Down the sloping hillside sprinted the pursued and the pursuer. Past fields of ripening corn and clumps of blooming rose bushes they rushed.

Verner's Mad Rush to Death.

In the beginning the leader had the advantage of a start of a dozen yards and the incentive of self-preservation, but, long before this journey to death was over, his opponent, being strong of limb and younger by more than a dozen years, had almost overcome the handicap and was right at the heels of his man. Then it was that he raised his smoking revolver and taking careful aim fired. This time his aim proved true. The man in front half turned and then with a groan fell face downward in the roadway. After that one awful groan the man made no sound. He lay in the middle of the road with his very life blood gushing from a jagged hole in his neck.
